

Editor's Notes: Acknowledgments 2012–13

I am grateful to the co-editors Bruce Benson, Fred Foldvary, Garrett Jones, George Selgin, and Larry White for all their fine work; I am grateful to the managing editor Jason Briggeman, who, since coming on about three years ago, has greatly improved and continues to improve the journal.

We are grateful to John Stephens for continuing to fine-tune the superb website and document-production system that he created, and to Brett Barkley, Ryan Daza, and Paul Mueller for occasional service to the journal. We are grateful to the authors who contribute material, especially David Colander of Middlebury College for serving as overseeing referee on the September 2013 issue, the twelve laureate economists who responded to a questionnaire for that issue, and to readers for their interest and feedback.

For friendship and vital sponsorship over the past two years, we are grateful to donors, especially the Earhart Foundation, the Charles G. Koch Foundation, the Mercatus Center at George Mason University, the John William Pope Foundation, Gerry Ohrstrom, and Robert and Susan Finocchio for their support.

We are grateful to the Atlas Economic Research Foundation for their friendship and in-kind support in housing EJW within their organization, especially Kelly Ream, Romulo Lopez, and Brad Lips.

We thank the Mercatus Center at George Mason University for co-organizing and sponsoring the debt crisis symposium appearing in the January 2012, especially Tyler Cowen (who co-edited the symposium) and Rob Raffety, and for partnering with us on the Milton Friedman symposium appearing in the May 2013 issue.

We thank the following individuals for helping provide intellectual accountability to EJW:
